What are the British like? How do other nations see them? Is the UK a popular country and why? These and other questions were in the survey about Britain and the British. What were the answers? Let's find out.

The most attractive about the UK is its culture and history; the weather and food aren't popular at all.

The British are very polite and have good manners, but they eat badly. When people visit England they want to try English breakfast. It's large and consists of bacon, eggs, sausages, fried bread, baked beans, mushrooms and black pudding (made from pigs' blood). But the most famous English food is fish and chips – not very healthy either.

The British are also very well-educated, friendly and have a good sense of humour, too, but they can be intolerant to people from other countries.

The most famous British people of all time are Shakespeare (still England's most famous writer), the Queen and David Beckham – football is still Britain's favourite sport.

The biggest city with a very rich history is London. One of the oldest buildings is the Tower of London. It's almost one thousand years old! It has got a terrible history – many people died there because it was a prison. Queens and kings were in this prison, too. It was a zoo, too, with lions and elephants. Another famous building is the Houses of Parliament or the Palace of Westminster with its famous clock tower Big Ben. The bell inside rings every quarter of an hour. Big Ben is a symbol of Britain, the British people and the British parliament.

English language, cities, universities and culture make people want to visit the UK as tourists, students or businessmen.
